Chris practises in all areas of public and human rights law and is ranked as a leading junior in those fields. Chambers & Partners 2019 describe him as a "Renowned junior counsel with a strong track record of appearing in high-profile judicial reviews". Chris is on the Equality and Human Rights Commission's Panel.

The bulk of his practice is judicial review and claims under the Human Rights Act 1998. He has experience of a wide range of subject matters, including professional regulation, mental health and mental capacity, health care, education, planning and environmental challenges, equality duties, social welfare, false imprisonment and immigration and asylum. For example, he recently acted in leading cases on the detention of victims of torture, criminal injuries compensation, safeguarding victims of human trafficking, the detention of children and the rights of unmarried partners to public sector pensions.
